First Wisconsin Group Picked for Colony Says, "This Is Our Chance. We Are Ready"

BY ALEXIS SCHMIDT

The first Wisconsin group of families, numbering about 200, arrived here yesterday, and the challenge is accepted.

Alaska offers life and independence to those who can work their luck from her unexplored soil. The families from the Mississippi Valley are the first to take up this challenge. They know the meaning of life and labor and the value of freedom.

When you see before you the-advantages that they have already, you can't help but feel their courage and devotion. They are working to improve their own conditions.

"This is our chance. We're ready. We want to be independent, and the freedom that we have here is what we desire."

They have come to Alaska to take their place in the land of opportunity.

Bill Pott of Fairbanks

This week, Bill Pott, a member of the expedition, arrived in Fairbanks. He reports that the group of families is well on its way to success.

The families have been busy preparing for their winter in Alaska. They have ordered supplies and are making plans for the future.

They are living in temporary Cabins, but they are determined to make the most of their time here.

Honeymoon for Pair

Astronomers in Fairbanks, recently, have been busy working on a new telescope. They have been working for several months to perfect it.

The telescope is a gift to the city of Fairbanks, and it is expected to be a valuable asset to the study of the sky.

First Wisconsin Families Selected for Alaskan Project

THREE new members of the First Wisconsin Colony are to be selected for the project, according to the government's announcement.

The families are of the Norwegian family of Stavanger, who are the founders of the project. They are來 from the town of Stavanger, in Norway, and they are coming to Alaska to work on the project.

The families have been chosen after a careful study of their qualifications.

The government believes that these families will be successful in their work, and they are expected to make a valuable contribution to the project.
